Customer/Installer Vinyl Flooring Inspection Checklist:

Below is a list of tasks you can perform to help determine the cause of a suspected flooring failure. This list is not all inclusive but covers the issues we see most often.

- If there is a bubble present in the vinyl, is it easily depressed by the hand or finger? If so, it may be a gas bubble trapped between the vinyl and the underlayment. In this case the installer should follow the vinyl manufacturers' recommendations to correct this issue.
- Is the floor crackling or popping as you walk across it? This could be a tack and release issue. Was the new floor installed over a pre-existing floor? If so, was the pre-existing floor thoroughly cleaned and swept so that it was free of debris before the installation of the new floor?
- Does the floor seem to be lifting up in large areas?
There are 3 possible scenarios:
 1. Was the fastener pattern outlined in the Patriot Timber Installation Guide followed (every 4" in the body of the panel and every 2" along the perimeter)? If there are not adequate fasteners holding the panel down, it will lift up.
 2. Was the depth of drive in the staple/nail gun set to the right depth? If not, the staples/nails can "blow-through" the first few layers of the panel. When this happens the panel will lift up. There is not adequate pressure holding the panel to the sub-floor.
 3. Moisture is present underneath the new underlayment. With the use of a moisture meter you can check the moisture level present in the floor. It should read between approximately 10-14%. If readings are drastically higher then there is a moisture issue. Check the proximity of water sources to make sure there are no plumbing issues.
- Are the 4' and 8' seams of the panels showing through to the vinyl?
This is referred to as telegraphing seams. There are 3 possible scenarios:
 1. Were the panels acclimated to the installation environment? Acclimation period should have been 24-48 hours prior to installation.
 2. If seam filler was used, was it allowed to fully dry before vinyl was laid?
Were the seams sanded smooth once the seam filler was dry?
 3. Were the panels butted too tightly together?

If you have eliminated all of the above, please contact your dealer or Patriot Timber Products at 877-787-3759 or CR@PatriotTimber.com for a Claim Notification Form.
